Papers of the families of Gray of Carntyne and Anstruther Gray of Kilmany.

Most of these papers consist of titles and estate papers relating to the lands of Carntyne and Shettleston in Glasgow. They are particularly important for the history of the colliery at Westmuir from the death of John Gray of Carntyne in 1796 until that of his grandson, the Rev John Hamilton Gray, in 1867, but there is material from both before, and in particular from after that period. Robert Gray (d.1833) was a resident landowner, and an enthusiastic coalmaster. Though not all the Westmuir records have survived for the period of his ownership, it is possible to gain a full picture of what took place at Carntyne. His son John Hamilton Gray became vicar of Bolsover in 1829, and from then until his death, was an absentee landlord. This resulted in an enormous amount of correspondence between Gray and the colliery manager, augmented in 1854 when John Anstruther Thomson, his son-in-law, took nominal charge of the estate. All the letters between Gray and Anstruther Thomson have been included in the business correspondence (16-40). In addition to this and to the normal accounts and sales records, there is a fine series of reports on the colliery by David Landale, the mining engineer (90).

Robert Gray was one of the Glasgow coal masters who formed a cartel between 1813 and 1817 to keep up the price of coal. All the account books from this operation are to be found in these papers (100-110), along with material relating to the Govan and Faskine collieries acquired by the cartel.

The Fife papers, relating almost entirely to the estate of Kilmany which was inherited by John Anstruther Thomson's third son, William, consist of little more than titles and some miscellaneous estate material and correspondence. William Anstruther Thomson changed his name to Anstruther Gray when he inherited Carntyne on his father's death in 1904. His private papers include letters sent home from India and Afghanistan, 1880-1, Australia, 1889-90, and South Africa, 1901-2 (148). The South African letters were prepared for publication (though never actually published), and some are only preserved in a typed transcript.

Among miscellaneous material are correspondence and papers relating to the wine trade between Bordeaux and Glasgow in the 1670s and 80s (143), letters from merchants in Maryland and North Carolina around 1700 (142), letters to the 9th Lord Sinclair, 1640, 1642 (142), and a page of poetry by Robert Hunter dated 1642 (152).
